With the intensified focus on antiterrorism in US trade policy — and the transfer of the Customs Service from the US Treasury Department to the Department of Homeland Security as the Bureau of Customs and Border Protection — traditional ways of thinking about customs and trade law are now out of date. In light of the war on terrorism and the emphasis on border security, businesses engaged in the cross-border exchange of goods face a multitude of new laws and initiatives — in addition to the traditional array of responsibilities required by the US Bureau of Customs and Border Protection and Immigration and Customs Enforcement. While these regulations are intended to strengthen border security, without careful planning they may have the unfortunate result of hindering the efficient movement of goods. In addition to updated customs forms and helpful appendices, this third edition covers the burgeoning area of free trade agreements between the US and countries around the globe. These agreements are a critical aspect of US bilateral trade relations, affecting not only duty rates but also rules of origin and policies on investment, trade in services and access to Government procurement markets. In sum, this book is an invaluable tool for a host of international trade professionals including in-house counsel dealing with import-export issues, corporate logistic managers, regulatory and compliance managers, and import-export specialists. Within the Department of Defense's (DoD's) planning, programming, and budgeting system (PPBS), the role of programming is to transform defense needs into a time-phased program of affordable and achievable defense activities. Priorities among these activities must be established, and this requires professional military as well as civilian government judgments about the relative importance of various defense needs. Thus the programming phase of PPBS is the critical step in which professional judgment is matched to resources to create the tangible objectives of the DoD. To strengthen its programming system within the DoD PPBS, the Marine Corps (MC) has recently introduced and tested new, more efficient and reliable techniques for collecting and utilizing the professional judgment of its staff. The new techniques have been developed using the management discipline of decision analysis. The result is a practical, conceptually advanced methodology that has succeeded in developing consensus among the MC staff where other procedures have failed. This report describes the decision-analytic methodology used by the MC in its programming, not merely overviews. It is suitable as a reference, and it may be used for training.
